

Eats'N'Sleeps

Heating up the Flatiron District is Nuela, a South American-inspired restaurant and ceviche bar from Executive Chef/Partner Adam Schop. Both the design and the menu are influenced by the cuisine and traditions found throughout South America—Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Venezuela. Outfitted by fashion designer Angel Sanchez and interior designer Christopher Coleman, Nuela glows with energetic red hues and industrial accents. The interior features dark woods and clean white walls punctuated with fiery red and orange fabrics that reference the South American color palette and draw inspiration from colonial “comedores” (dining rooms) found throughout the continent. The space is divided into three separate areas—the more casual 50-seat cevicheria and bar is flanked by more formal dining rooms with long communal tables that lend a festive atmosphere. The menu includes an assortment of small plates like spicy tuna with crispy rice and creamy panca and foie gras croquetas. Over 15 seasonal ceviches like lobster with cucumber, lime, ginger, shiso and pink peppercorn, and scallop with charred pineapple, vanilla, and mint are offered. Entrees include scallops with humitas, parmesan-creamed leeks and tomato vinaigrette, and churrasco with yuca hash browns and chimichurri.
